Mum's the word

DESIGNER Lucie Trinco knows handbags. After honing her skills in Milan, she has spent the past three years as head of design at Oroton, designing bags for brands such as Jigsaw, Mambo, Fiorelli and Saba.

When her friends began having babies, Trinco saw a gap in the market for an "on-trend" bag that catered to the needs of new mothers.

Enter Il Tutto — practical, style-savvy bags for mums in butter-soft Italian leather, with details including linings that can be removed for washing, insulated bottle holders, pacifier clips, waterproof changing mats, mobile phone pockets and pen holders.

As the fashion pack up for London Fashion Week next week, one British name making waves here is Karen Millen. A huge success story with stores across the world, including in Sydney.

Millen is part of the "St" world — a term used the time in the UK but often here in Australia.

Simply put, when the luxury, big-label catwalk shows happen in Europe, Millen and her team interpret the trends and quickly recreate styles.

Millen, said to be worth a cool $120 million, has strived to retain quality in her collections.

I am extremely impressed with Millen's take on summer and, after a stroll through her store, have been swayed by her cut, fabric choices, quality and s
